ASI Welcomes Two New CSU Interns

Fostering community support and involvement is a core value that ASI has held close since its establishment in 1991. To advance this goal, ASI has bolstered its internship program with two Colorado State University students.

Rachel Survil is a sophomore technical journalism major with experience writing and editing copy for the local college newspaper. As the staff writer at ASI, she is in charge of developing and maintaining the company's public relations department, including the quarterly newsletter. Her next big project is working with a local Web designer to rewrite and redesign ASI's Web site to make it more organized, helpful and user-friendly.

"I am thrilled to have the chance to write for such a wonderful company," Survil said. "I've never worked with such kind and supportive people, and I'm looking forward to making public relations improvements that will help both ASI and our clients succeed."

Greg Harmon is a senior business administration major who will graduate this December. His background in marketing is a strength he feels will support ASI's growth. Harmon will assist the sales team with sales operations and marketing activities, as well as help with lead generation, focusing on the Deltek enterprise resource planning (ERP) application.

"I look forward to the exciting challenges and opportunities that await and hope to make a positive impact serving as an intern for the ASI sales team," Harmon said.

Founded by Colorado State University alumni, ASI works with professors at the university to locate its finest students for intern positions. ASI is proud to offer opportunities to top scholars as a way to nurture the local community.
